Knowledge to Action?Evidence-Based Health Care in Context

Edited by Sue Dopson, University of Oxford, and Louise Fitzgerald, De Montfort University

Health services can and should be improved by applying research findings about best practice. Yet, in Knowledge to Action?, the authors explore why it nevertheless proves notoriously difficult to implement change based on research evidence in the face of strong professional views and complex organizational structures.

The book draws on a large body of evidence acquired in the course of nearly fifty in-depth case studies, following attempts to introduce evidence-based practice in the UK NHS over more than a decade. Using qualitative methods to study hospital and primary care settings, they are able to shed light on why some of these attempts succeeded where others faltered. By opening up the intricacies and complexities of change in the NHS, they reveal the limitations of the simplistic approaches to implementing research or introducing evidence-based health care.

Policy Bureaucracy*Government with a Cast of Thousands*

Edward C Page, Sidney and Beatrice Webb Professor of Public Policy, London School of Economics and Political Science, and Bill Jenkins, Professor of Public Policy and Management, University of Kent at Canterbury

Policy making is not only about the cut and thrust of politics. It is also a bureaucratic activity. In this groundbreaking work, two leading authorities come together to examine the world of the policy bureaucrat for the first time. The volume draws in crucial debates over accountability and democratic ideology, hierarchy and expertise, and should establish itself as a central point of reference for scholars and practitioners alike.

Understanding Regulation*Theory, Strategy, and Practice*

Robert Baldwin, London School of Economics, and Martin Cave, Brunel University and a Member of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission

The way in which regulation works is a key concern of industries, consumers, citizens, and governments alike. Understanding Regulation takes the reader through the central issues of regulation and discusses these from a number of disciplinary perspectives. A central argument of Understanding Regulation is that regulation inevitably gives rise to political contention but that persons of different political persuasion can nevertheless converse sensibly on the search for better regulation.

Public Health, Ethics, and Equity

Edited by Sudhir Anand, University of Oxford, Fabienne Peter, University of Warwick, and Amartya Sen, Harvard University

In the last fifty years, average overall health status has increased worldwide, but it is increasingly clear that this achievement has not been equally distributed. Inequities in health have denied many people equality of opportunity. This book builds an interdisciplinary understanding of health equity with contributions from distinguished philosophers, anthropologists, economists, and public-health specialists.

Structural Reforms Without Prejudices

Edited by Tito Boeri, Bocconi University and Fondazione Rodolfo DeBenedetti, Micael Castanheira, Université Libre de Bruxelles, Riccardo Faini, Università degli Studi di Roma "Tor Vergata", and Vincenzo Galasso, Bocconi University and IIGER

What makes economic reforms a success or a failure? Why do we witness ambivalent attitudes to reforms? Can governments implement reforms differently, without inflicting prejudice to large fringes of the population? This book explores these issues by comparing a number of reforms across a large set of countries and sectors. It aims to help readers understand the process of reform and the origins of success, and to help reformers discover new ways to implement reforms to benefit the most people.
