The Law and Practice of Compelled Evidence in Civil Proceedings

Sara Cockerill QC, Barrister, Essex Court Chambers

- The only work to focus solely on this specific area
- Provides a uniquely detailed and comprehensive reference on both oral and documentary evidence
- Practically focused with clear guidance on issues arising in drafting and defending letters of request and in conducting or advising at a hearing of a deposition under a letter of request

Courts have the right to compel non-parties to give evidence or produce documents in aid of litigation and arbitration proceedings. As well as providing a clear statement of the law relating to witness summonses, letters of request and the European Taking of Evidence Regulation, this book gives practical guidance with use of checklists, for example on the issues arising in drafting and defending letters of request and conducting or advising at a hearing of a deposition under a letter of request.

Sara Cockerill QC practices from Essex Court Chambers. She specialises in all areas of commercial law, and in particular in shipping and international trade, and insurance and reinsurance. She has wide ranging experience of litigating and arbitrating large scale high value disputes. During the course of her practice she has developed a special interest in the subject of compelled evidence in civil proceedings via defending and challenging proposed letters of request and appearing at the hearing of such letters of request - both as examiner and counsel. She has lectured on this subject (amongst others) to large city law firms.
