To the Designer

Once the editor has done a first edit on the book, the book is e-mailed to a designer. The designer lays the manuscript out into pages and decides what the book will look like. The designer thinks about the colours that will make the book look eye-catching.

Fonts

The designer also chooses which font to use. The font is the style and size of the letters. Fonts come in different sizes and different shapes. The designer also designs any charts or graphs that the editor has suggested.

While the designer is working on the design, a photo researcher searches for photos that will fit well into the book.
